Project Titanium Transient Stability Analysis

The model and dynamic databases representing the [REDACTED] were used for this analysis. The system model incorporated the new Franklin Farms generation, [REDACTED] load, and the associated transmission facilities. The [REDACTED] load was modeled as [REDACTED] which were further divided into separate components: [REDACTED] Stability simulations were performed to evaluate the impact of the Project Titanium data center on the transient behavior of nearby generation and the overall stability of the Entergy system. In accordance with Entergy's criteria, the dynamic stability assessment considered both three-phase faults and single-line-to-ground faults with a stuck breaker. The table below lists all simulated fault cases and corresponding results. For each case, plots are provided showing generator angle, bus voltage, and load MW. Load values are expressed in per unit on a 100 MVA base. The table demonstrates that all fault conditions [REDACTED]
